

3 new features that make smartphone-based monitoring even smarter.

1. DRUG COURT REMINDER

Missed appointments, especially drug court appearances, cost your agency and taxpayers money. And sending reminders and notifications in the mail is expensive administrative overhead.

With Guardian's new Drug Court Reminder feature, case managers can now send automated alerts about upcoming appointments or action items to ensure offenders remember and show up. While designed specifically for offenders sentenced through drug court, these alerts can be used for just about anything where a reminder might be helpful.

Reminders can be created using a simple form and can be specified in three ways:

Days before the event	Hours before the event	Minutes before the event
-----------------------	------------------------	--------------------------

For example, a case manager with an offender who has a pretrial hearing in the months ahead could set up multiple reminders at one week before, three hours before, thirty minutes before and even at the time of the event itself.

2. ALERTS & NOTIFICATIONS

For case managers who spend a lot of time on the road, access to email can be limited yet it's critical they receive timely reminders and alerts. With Guardian's new Alerts & Notifications feature, case managers get SMS alerts on the move. Alerts and notifications can easily be configured, updated and changed as necessary through the Telmate Command Center. Now case managers can stop looking for key information and have it sent to them.

3. CUSTOM CHECK-IN PROGRAMS

Many offenders get jobs in non-traditional work place environments where daily check-ins are not possible. Now, with the Guardian Touch program case managers can configure custom check-in schedules that specify select days and the frequency of check-ins. This powerful new feature aids in re-entry and expands work options for offenders, while maintaining Guardian's monitoring effectiveness and integrity.
